My domain name is in quarantine, can you take it out?

When you permanently cancel a domain name, it usually goes into 'quarantine' first before it can be registered by others again. This period is intended to give the previous owner time to reconsider the decision to cancel the domain and to allow wrongful cancellations to be reversed.

We can take the domain name out of quarantine for you if you are the original owner (you must be able to prove this). However, there are costs involved, which may vary per domain extension. Even if your domain is in quarantine with another provider, we can take it out of quarantine for you. To do so, contact us at support@kyzoe.be
